Background

Chief Justice Maureen O'Connor has done more to modernize the Ohio courts than any time in history. She brought electronic docketing and e-filing to the Supreme Court and started a program of grants to local courts to enable them to go electronic. Further advancements have increased access and reduced costs for litigants and taxpayers.

When the worldwide COVID pandemic hit, Ohio was ahead of most states in its ability to keep courts open and cases moving.

Chief Justice O'Connor has improved access to justice by advocating for constitutional bail practices and ability to pay assessments for court fines and fees. She is spearheading the creation of a statewide criminal sentencing database and standardized data for felony sentencing. The chief justice established a task force to study grand jury proceedings in Ohio, created a committee to examine the administration of the death penalty. She initiated and led collaborative efforts of an eight-state initiative to combat the nation's opioid epidemic.

Chief Justice O'Connor is past president of the National Conference of Chief Justices and former chair of the National Center for State Courts Board of Directors. Chief Justice Maureen O'Connor is a graduate of Seton Hill University and the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law.
